

CALL FOR PAPERS

Special Issue 2013:

Inequality, Polarization and Social Conflict.

Social conflicts such as demonstrations, grievances, strikes, revolts, rebellions and civil wars are still increasing not only in number but also in intensity. In economics, efforts for a better understanding of the causes and the mechanisms underlying these types of social-unrest situations have been made in order to prevent and to solve those conflicts. Currently, new theoretical models and empirical tools closely tied to the concepts of poverty, inequality, polarization and collective action are being used to conduct research in this area.

The journal Cuadernos de Economía invites submissions for its special issue on inequality, polarization and social conflict. Original pieces of research (either theoretical and/or empirical), where any concept mentioned above becomes relevant for the study are welcome. The special issue will be published in September 2013.
